Our Story

Alex with her ivPolePals ivPolePals were invented in 2006 by

Lynne and Alexandra Salser during a hospital stay at Medical City Children's Hospital, in Dallas, Texas. Alexandra inherited an incurable metabolic disease called LCHAD, and is hospitalized often. Her days of hospitalization are lightened by clever characters that were created to make the ever-present IV pole, with its life-giving fluids, kid-friendly. The first prototypes, "Watery and Flo", came to life, making the necessary pole tolerable for the little patient. The cheery creations, now known as ivPolePals, have multiplied. They have been released into the marketplace as critters, picture frames, message boards, patches, logos, and inspirational messages that universally attach to IV poles. The "Pals" offer encouragement for children and adults alike. Each one comes with the special assignment that worked for Alexandra — to decorate its owner's room for recovery!
